Parkinson's Disease: Hope Through Research

Dr. Ch. Arun Kumar described the symptoms and causes of Parkinson's disease. Neurological practice often sees this movement disorder, but its diagnosis and treatment require a lot of skill. Levodopa is a main treatment option, but the sudden, uncontrollable movements of levodopa-induced dyskinesia (LID) are frequently seen in patients on levodopa. For PD patients who cannot be managed solely with medications, surgical approaches such as unilateral pallidotomy and deep brain stimulation have been successful. This side effect typically appears after a lengthy period of treatment, but it can also be observed in shorter time frames of a few days or months.

Current Research on Tribal Medicines

Dr.N Venugopal explained about the conceptual difficulties in recognizing those healing traditions that function outside the official healthcare system. Though codified forms of traditional healing which come under AYUSH have been recognized, legitimized, and integrated into the national health system, the non-codified forms of healing, such as indigenous/folk/tribal healings, have not got a due share of recognition and patronage despite being widely practiced. Recognition and integration of such diverse forms of popular and non-codified traditions in the national healthcare system has become a perplexing issue, coupled with unclear policy directions, and a lack of sound strategies and programmatic actions. And he discussed about the certification and documentation initiatives in the past few years are significant and a ray of hope in the pursuit of recognition. Tribal medicine should be recognized and supported as a distinct form of healing and given due space in the national health system to grow and develop while keeping its distinctive identity.
